do this in the .NET about an Azure Services database, and the approach is exactly the same for Power BI using SDK.Adomd.net. Enter the following expression on the fan bar: Number week = WEEKNUM ('calendar' [DATA]) This week function returns the number of the week (for more options to define the number of the Week go here). The second parameter is optional: (1) if we want the week to start on Sunday and (2) if we want the week to start on Monday). Extend your BI energy report using the personalized visuals potency hierarchy we will suppose that we have a set of sales data with data columns, category and revenue and we want to see how sales performance is per week. In your next, we apply a min in the date column to get the previous date we have for all records with the same number of the week and year. As a result, lines with different numbers or values of the different week will not be included in the result. I hope you have found this tutorial. This is as possible as Power Bi is built upon the analysis services, and the general direction of the team and the product is that Power Bi will eventually become a service superset Analysis of Azure. When we clicked this, the graphic by the names of the days now looks like it should. In the Fields pane in the right sidebar, select the Calendar table and click New Column Column Table tools. Microsoft Power Bi strives to support a "data-directed" culture for companies, allowing users at all data access levels so they can discover key insights. The tabular model, then the tabular model behind a Bi energy report is effectively a database of analysis services. We can also use the number of the week and the name of the day as part of the hierarchy like this. In my next post of the blog, we will continue our PDF import exploitation as started here. on here.
